COMMENT OF THE DAY

In The Best Traditions

THE courage of Detective

Constable Leung in successfully fighting it out with an armed robber after being himself severely wounded, and then following that up by bringing about the capture of another man believed to be involved in the Gramplan Road hold-up on Thursday night, was in the best traditions of devotion to duty which belong to our Police Force. The attack made on Detective Leung was calculated and brutal, emphasizing once again that the Colony is still plagued with thugs and gangsters who will not hesitate to resort to extreme forms of violence if they meet with resistance. Yet the brave action of Detective Leung at the very least serves as a warning to these desperadoes that the Police of Hongkong are not to be intimidated. Armed bandits have no reason to flatter themselves that because they carry guns and are prepared to use them they make themselves immune to swift and drastic vengeance. Thursday night's episode was by no means the first time Chinese members of the Police Force have demonstrated their willingness to disregard their own lives in the line of duty. But in view of all the circumstances, Detective Leung's behaviour was outstandingly meritorious.

China And Russia

AN American magazine claims to possess information that Red China and Soviet Russia are "in sharp disagreement over continuing the Korean War." The danger about this sort of disclosure is that it can easily persuade people into wishful thinking. It is true, however, that the world was astonished when Peking rejected the Indian compromise plan for an armistice. It may, therefore, well be that the reason for final rejection by China can be found in her relations with Russia. It is to Russia's advantage to keep UN forces engaged in Korea. Whether it is also to China's advantage to let a war drag on in which her own resources are engaged is more debatable. Nice calculations may be going on in Peking of the fruits which one policy would win from Russia and another from the UN.

Long Career Ending

General Van Fleet Retiring

Notable Service In Korea

Washington, Jan. 23. The American Army announced today that General James Van Fleet, the Eighth Army Commander in Korea, will be retired on March 31.

He will be succeeded by Lieutenant-General Maxwell D. Taylor.

General Taylor is the present Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations and Administration of the army. He will leave in a few days for Japan.

After a briefing at General Mark Clark's Far East Command Headquarters, General Taylor will go to Korea to visit units at the front before General Van Fleet comes home, probably sometime early next month.

General Van Fleet would have retired automatically on January 31, but the former Secretary of the Army, Mr. Frank Pace, extended his service to March 31 so that President Eisenhower would have the opportunity to extend the service of General Van Fleet still further if he wished.

President Eisenhower said in a statement issued through his Press Office that he considered General Van Fleet the best qualified combatant General in the United States forces.

He regretted that the passage of time had deprived the United States of his services in Korea, so that President Eisenhower would be receiving the President in his office tomorrow.—Reuter.

Truman's Act Of Clemency

Washington, Jan. 23. The former Governor of Louisiana, Richard Leche, who went to prison for mail fraud in the early 1940s, was pardoned by President Truman just four days before Mr. Truman left office. It was disclosed today.

Leche was paroled on June 27, 1945. He had been sentenced to a ten-year prison term on a charge of using the mails to defraud.

Mr. Truman's presidential pardon restored his full citizenship, including the right to vote. Leche was convicted in connection with a deal to sell trucks for more than they were worth to a Louisiana Commission. He was Governor at that time.

Leche was the handpicked gubernatorial candidate of the late Senator Huey P. Long. Although Leche had said he had no aspirations to be Governor, Long on his deathbed named Leche as the man he wanted to "carry on" as Governor.

Leche was elected by the largest vote ever cast for a Governor in Louisiana and served office in 1948.—United Press.

US Warns Italy About Selling Oil To Communists

BRITAIN TO SEEK INJUNCTION AGAINST TANKER

London, Jan. 23.

The United States has warned Italy that she could lose American aid if Iranian oil aboard the tanker Miriella is sold to a Communist nation, sources reported today.

The Miriella, chartered by an Italian company, is nosing her way out of the Persian Gulf with 5,000 tons of oil claimed by both Iran and the British-controlled Anglo-Iranian Oil Company.

Italy responded to the American warning by saying that she would do what she could to keep Miriella from selling oil behind the iron curtain, it was understood.

Reports had circulated in Rome that a sale to Poland was contemplated. The informant said officials of the American mission in Rome pointed out to the Italian government within the past week that the provisions of the Battle Act could be invoked if the oil is carried by the Miriella behind the iron curtain.

The Battle Act lays down that foreign nations getting American aid can lose it if they sell strategic materials to the Communists. Britain, which still claims the Abadan oil as her own pending a settlement of the nationalisation row, already has served notice on Italy: the AIOC will prosecute that claim in the courts.

The Miriella's course has been kept secret. Thus far AIOC has not decided just where it will seek a writ to halt the vessel while ownership of its disputed cargo is weighed.

ASSURANCE GIVEN If the tanker passes through the Suez Canal, AIOC could use the Egyptian courts. Otherwise it presumably would have to try to assert its claims at any bunkering port the Miriella must use.

The American move reportedly produced an assurance from the Italian government it will do what it can to keep the Miriella from selling the oil behind the iron curtain.

The Italian authorities, so far as can be established here, have said no apparent licence for the Iranian oil.

The Miriella is owned by Compagnia Italiana Trasporti Marittimi di Genova, leased to the Rome Compagnia Petroliera Italiana and consigned to the Suez Canal. According to Italian informants, it has links with the great Fiat automobile interests.—Associated Press.

NOT TO INTERCEPT London, Jan. 23. Britain would most probably seek an injunction against the owners of the 3,500-ton Italian tanker, Miriella, now steaming from Abadan with a cargo of oil claimed by the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company, a Foreign Office spokesman said here today.

The injunction would be applied for by the company in the local court when the ship docks.

The spokesman said there was no question of British vessels intercepting the Miriella on the high seas—in the Persian Gulf or elsewhere—or committing any acts of piracy.

He added that Britain would stand by her declared policy of taking all possible steps to protect her interests in the matter of the oil dispute with Persia.—Reuter.

LIKELY DESTINATION Genoa, Jan. 23. Shipping sources here said tonight they had "good reason to believe" the Italian tanker, Miriella, with its cargo of 5,000 tons of Iran's oil was heading for this port.

The sources would not reveal the grounds for their belief that the tanker would put in here.—Reuter.

11 Cars Involved In Collision Vinny, France, Jan. 23. Eleven motor cars were involved in a collision today on an icy road leading over Vinny Ridge.

One car skidded and the rest piled on top.

Only casualty was a woman who broke a leg.—Reuter.

Wilson's Appointment Approved

Becomes Secretary Of Defence

Washington, Jan. 23.

The Senate Armed Services Committee today unanimously approved Mr. Charles E. Wilson's nomination as Secretary of Defence.

Senator John Stennis (Democrat, Mississippi) told newsmen of the action as he left the committee room at the end of a session in which Mr. Wilson made two appearances to "clarify" testimony he first gave the group on January 15.

Mr. Wilson today promised to divest himself of all his General Motors interests if he were confirmed, and said he regretted exceedingly any contrary impression he had given.

Further, Mr. Wilson told the committee, he would discuss with President Eisenhower any case which came up touching General Motors interests and his duties as Defence Secretary.

ALREADY RESIGNED He had resigned some time ago as General Motors President, after Mr. Eisenhower first designated him for the defence job.

The committee chairman, Senator Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts, said he would report the nomination to the full Senate tomorrow for action on Monday.

Mr. Saltonstall said Mr. Wilson promised to divest himself of all his General Motors holdings before April 20. He said Mr. Wilson agreed to get out of General Motors "lock, stock and barrel."

Senator Saltonstall also said Mr. Wilson planned to sell the stock, but might give a "small percentage of it" to his children.

He added that the committee action was by voice vote with all 12 members present voting "aye." Three members were absent, but the Senator said he knew of no one who would have voted no.—United Press.

General Evans will be succeeded at SHAPE by Major-General P. N. White, now Chief of Staff at Northern Command.

Colonel J. H. Cockburn will become Deputy Chief of Staff, Allied Land Forces, Central Europe.

Major-General Evans, who was appointed to the SHAPE staff last year, was previously General J. H. Cockburn's British land forces, Hongkong, for three years. He won the Distinguished Service Order (DSO) three times: first in the Middle East in July 1941, a bar in 1942, and a second bar two years later for gallant service in Burma.—Reuter.

Shot Detective Said To Be "Doing Nicely"

It was learned this morning, when enquiries were made regarding the condition of Detective Police Constable 622 Leung Yiu-tong, 24, who was seriously wounded when he was shot by an armed man in Gramplan Road on Thursday night, that he was "doing nicely," and there was every hope for his recovery. He underwent an operation in Kowloon Hospital yesterday.

The condition of another man, Fung Sik-ying, who was alleged to be one of three men who attempted to rob the detective on Thursday night, was reported as "not being too good." Fung was shot three times by the detective after the latter had suffered two shot wounds in the abdomen.

Two men have already been charged in Kowloon Court with attempted murder of the detective and with assault with intent to rob.

Chaplin is the Highlight Of "Limelight"

Says SUE DAWSON

The world's greatest clown — known wherever people are able to laugh, one of the first men to be truly world-famous, and that at the unusual age of twenty-five — has made what many will call his greatest picture, and the theme? Despair, suffering, melancholy — and tenderness. How little "funny" men are understood!

The film is "Limelight", and Charles Chaplin is author, musical composer, producer, director, clown and actor. Do not go to it to laugh. The laugh is on the music-hall comedian who has had his day. There are comic scenes of course, but they really only come about twice in the long picture, and then with a suggestion of autumn leaves.

Charles Chaplin and Claire Bloom in the film.

Wrong Guess

By Ernie Bushmiller

'MISTER EUROPE' & HIS MIRACLE

By PETER KIRK

"MR Europe" has gone. The man who for nearly five years has dominated the European diplomatic scene—Robert Schuman, Foreign Minister of France—has been dropped from the new French Government formed by M. Rene Mayer.

In a sense, Schuman's dismissal was inevitable. He has become the victim of his own policy.

The man who, two years ago, was irreproachable because he was succeeding in getting France to live at peace with Germany is now reproached for just that reason. And M. Mayer has had to come to the conclusion that the ratification of the European Defence Community has little chance of success unless Schuman is out of the way.

So, in a sense, too, we can say that Schuman's great mission has ended in failure. But really that is not so. His name will always be remembered as embodying the spirit of co-operation in Europe. The Schuman Plan—perhaps the most audacious example of diplomatic initiative ever seen in Europe—is his memorial, and he would ask for no more than that.

Ever a philosopher, he knows only too well that there is little gratitude in politics. But he knows too that his work can never be undone and that he has changed the face of Europe.

New Friendship

In fact, but he has performed what many people swore was quite impossible—he has made the lion of Germany lie down with the lamb of France.

He has brought Europe's two hereditary enemies together in new friendship and comradeship, so they are now working together peacefully in the Schuman Plan for the welfare of both their countries.

This is no mean achievement. It is doubtful whether any other man but Schuman could have accomplished it.

But Schuman had an advantage which few other Frenchmen possessed—he was both German and French. He was born in the border country of Lorraine, and for the first 33 years of his life was a German. After the Treaty of Versailles, Lorraine—and so, Schuman—became French, but he still retained an affection for the German people, it not for their rulers.

Schuman's appointment as Foreign Minister in 1948 coincided almost exactly with the birth of the West German Republic under Konrad Adenauer. The two men had a great deal in common. They were both devout Roman Catholics and both came from the border lands between France and Germany. Both conceived themselves as having a mission to bring to an end the age-old feud between the two countries.

Grand Design

It was Schuman who conceived the plan that bears his name, and it was Adenauer who made it possible.

Despite intense opposition in their own countries, they brought the grand design to fruition in Luxembourg last year. And, since then, both of them have been working with all their might to bring about the other half of the Schuman Plan—the European Defence Community.

Now Schuman has gone, but his policy will not go with him. For France, and not showing the utmost political instability, in that she has had 17 Cabinets since the end of the war, has shown herself consistent in one thing—her Foreign Ministers. In all those 17 Cabinets, there have only been two Foreign Ministers, Schuman, in all that he did, has been building on the foundations laid for him by his brilliant young predecessor, Georges Bidault, Foreign Minister from 1944 to 1948, when he in his turn was asked for being too pro-German. And now it is Bidault who returns to the Foreign Minister's luxurious flat on the Quai d'Orsay.

Not Idle

During the intervening five years, Bidault has not been idle. He has served one term (1950-51) as Prime Minister, and one as Minister of Defence. And as such, he has given full support to the E.D.C.

Still only 53, he can be relied on to fight strongly for the integration of Europe's defences into one army, and indeed he will be looking further to the day when the whole of Europe comes under one government.

GILES GIVES THE A.B.C. OF BACK-TO-SCHOOL WEEK FROM AN OLD BOY'S VIEWPOINT OVER TO THE ENEMY

London Express Service

BEYERLEY BAXTER on Broadway

Too much talent tied up!

THE New York theatre today is like a man who is feeling fine but is losing weight every day and cannot arrest the process.

The trade unions have made the cost of production so heavy that if a new play receives bad notices it is taken off at once.

In the meantime the expanding giant of commercial television, backed by limitless funds, has taken over several of the theatres for studio purposes.

When you add to that deficit the fact that the successful "musicals" play for two and three years, you will realise the shrinking opportunities for the American dramatist and the American actor.

In fact, I can imagine few more hazardous jobs than that of an American actor today. It is true that television may toss him a succulent bone now and then, but when it has been gnawed to the end he is back in the market where the demand is so much less than the supply.

PARADOX

NOR can he turn his eyes to the golden skies of Hollywood. The lush days of film-making are over. Television is keeping people at home, except when an outstanding film comes to town.

And there is also the threat of the new three-dimensional film, which promises to be as big a revolution as when the talkies added sound to sight.

A paradox which is utterly illogical, but is not less harmful for that, faces the American actor today. There is no reason why Hamlet, Prince of Denmark, should speak with an English accent, except that tradition has willed it so.

Yet a New York audience simply will not have a Hamlet who speaks American. Nor do they want an American Romeo, Richard III, or Marc Antony.

That is why Mr Maurice Evans, of London, who was in the original cast of "Journey's End" is still the most popular male classic actor here. In New York, where he has lived for so many years.

Alfred Lunt even the score by being the undisputed star of intelligent comedy, but he has to share his glory with the English-born Lynn Fontanne. I have already referred to the longevity of the musicals. Take "South Pacific," for example. For three years it has occupied the Majestic Theatre at box office prices from $2 to 25¢ per seat.

Night after night the cast goes through the same routine, the same songs, the same jokes. They could do it standing on their heads or trying to think out the winners of the next day's racing.

Where is new talent to get a hearing? And what will the cast of "South Pacific" do when they have finally served their sentence?

If you add "Pal Joey" and "The King and I" and the very tough "Guys and Dolls" to the list, you will see how heavily the doors are barred to new talent.

FEW GOOD ONES

REVIEWING the London theatre in 1952 I gave it as my opinion that very few good plays are being written in England.

Looking at the New York stage, I can assume only that very few American plays of any kind are being written just now.

Maurice Evans has forsaken the classics to star in "Dial M for Murder," imported from London.

Beatrice Lillie, aided and abetted by Reginald Gardiner, is packing them out with comic stuff that she gave us 20 years ago.

Margaret Sullivan is drawing tears with Rattigan's "The Deep Blue Sea." And for some reason that harmless little "The Four Poster" which creaked for a short time at the Ambassadors in London, has been hailed as a triumph by the New Yorkers.

There are, of course, some American plays, but even so, they include revivals. And if you think that my view of the American theatre is distorted by prejudice, let me summon to my aid that cantankerous veteran of American dramatic criticism, George Jean Nathan.

TOUGH WORDS

WHEN I was Editor of the Daily Express, in the 1920's, we brought Nathan to London as a guest critic, but he could not get his bearings.

His famed audacity and his ruthless disregard for anyone's feelings became nothing more than the "cut-throat" of a nation nunt. In fact, he was a flop, although we enjoyed his companionship on the Express.

But listen to what old man Nathan has to say about the New York theatre in 1952:—

"Plays of genuine quality have been—rare as a hospital bed—stale, and the scene has been flooded either with outright dramatic rubbish or, at best, exhibits of some superficial smoothness or relative novelty that call only for casual appraisal, for the most part easily within the competence of a cub reporter with a dark suit."

"The drama critic has thus become the forgotten man, and his place has been taken by the reviewing reporter or by the erstwhile critic despairingly hanging on to his professional trap with his teeth and seeking to show that, while it reveals his nature—and to some extent his readers—it at least privileges him the continued opportunity to eat and buy shoes for the baby."

That is, of course, extreme, but Nathan is blasted so many times in his time that no one will listen unless he shouts. Shorn of its gusto, there is substance in what he says.

In New York and London I have listened to dialogue on the stage which I would not sit through in private life for any consideration.

My impression is that the straight play, as differentiated from musicals, is definitely on the decline in America. Yet the New York theatre cannot live on musicals alone.

LOOK TO LONDON

UNTIL, therefore, some new dramatists appear on the American scene, the New York theatre will look more and more to London.

In fact, they will begin to regard London as a tryout centre for New York. They might even produce their plays first in London because it would be cheaper than doing it at home.

There is no harm in this. On the contrary it will add strength to the London theatre and give dollars to Mr Butler.

But not all drama is confined to the theatre. On Christmas Eve I went into the entrance of St Bartholomew's Church, in Park Avenue. I had hardly entered the portals when Bedouins, shepherds, angels, and Wise Men came hurrying out from the grooved church into the adjoining room reserved for them.

The stage manager stood beside me and waved them on. Just then came the young woman who had acted the Virgin. With real reverence in his voice, the stage manager said: "You did a swell job, girls."

I don't know why there are not more good American plays. Something is happening every minute in New York.

A letter from Brazil*

"MY ROLEX was bought about twelve years ago. I have worn it constantly ever since."

"Once, in the Brazilian jungle, a most amazing thing happened. We were travelling up the river Jequitinhonha, in the State of Bahia, by canoe. My wrist caught between the paddle and the edge of the canoe, the strap broke, and the watch disappeared into the flood. Search proved useless and I was obliged to continue, with a heavy heart. Two months later, travelling down the same river, I stopped for the night several miles below the point where I had lost my Rolex, on a little beach where another camp had been established. That night, sitting round the fire, we began talking. Asked how things were going, an old man said, 'Very badly, sir. We have been panning for two weeks, and we have only found mosquitos.' (Little diamonds of no value.) 'Pedro dos Santos thought he'd found a large piece yesterday, but it was only a watch,' he said, spitting with disgust."

"My heart stopped, and I asked to see the find, and scornfully my dear Rolex was hurled at me across the fire. Immediately I asked Pedro if he would sell it to me. He consented, willingly, thinking that a watch that had been in the water was worth nothing. 'The wonder doesn't even work,' he said. With a broad grin at the idiosyncrasy of this foreigner he pocketed five 'milreis'. The laugh was on the other side of his face when a few minutes later, I put it back on my wrist and set it going!"

This is an extract from a letter written to the Rolex Watch company by a customer, Mr. Victor L. Bondi, now of Geneva. We think it speaks for itself. There are few hardships a Rolex watch cannot undergo; that delicate mechanism is so made, so constructed, so well protected by the Oyster case. This, anyway, is the true story of what happened to one Rolex Oyster.

*Mr. Bondi's original letter can be inspected at the office of the Rolex Watch Company, 18 rue du Rhodan, Geneva, Switzerland.

Delicacy and strength are combined to perfection in the Rolex Oyster. Delicacy of movement, so that its accuracy is unquestioned; strength of construction, so that no dust or damp or water can penetrate that perfectly waterproof Oyster case and harm the movement.

The Rolex Red Seal is a further proof of perfection—it is a sign that the Swiss Government have tested the watch and awarded it one of their coveted Official Timing Certificates.

CAN DRUGS MAKE BULL'S-EYES EASIER?

INTRODUCES THE JITTER-BOX TEST FOR MARKSMEN

COULD a soldier improve his marksmanship with a rifle by taking an "anti-jitter" drug beforehand?

What effect on a rifleman's aim have the seasickness drugs now given to troops boarding assault craft?

If a course of treatment with penicillin or sulphur drugs upsets the steadiness of a soldier's aim does that effect last?

British defence scientists are settling these important questions by using the ingenious "jitter-box" pictured above.

The soldier under test aims his rifle at a standard target while two thin beams of light are projected from the "jitter-box" on to a small mirror fixed to the rifle.

The mirror reflects the light beams back to the "jitter-box" which contains a complicated system of lenses, mirrors, and prisms.

There, the smallest movements of the rifle muzzle are automatically analysed and recorded by a camera.

An electrical contact on the rifle trigger linked with the camera records the exact moment of firing on the film.

The device was invented by Mr. Kenneth Spring, of the Supply Ministry's research station near Chertsey, Surrey.

Dr. E.T. Renbourn is supervising the drug tests at the Physiological Research Laboratory, Farnborough, Hants. Results of the tests will be kept secret.

FOOTNOTE.—Allyscine, one of the drugs commonly used to ward off seasickness, is known to have a depressing effect on the brain and nervous system.

This may help to end toothache

THE addition of a gas called fluorine to drinking water to help prevent tooth decay is to be recommended by the Health Ministry.

A Government mission sent to America, where fluorine has been used for many months, has reported favourably. Its head, Professor Hubert Stones of the Medical Research Council, says that fluorine had greatly decreased dental decay among American children.

Certain areas in Britain are to be selected for a pilot-scale test in which minute traces of fluorine—a canary yellow gas—will be dissolved in the water for houses.

Boys over 12 oversleep and miss school

MOST British children are losing a whole year of their schooling through absence. And much of this missed education is not due to genuine sickness.

These disturbing discoveries have emerged from an inquiry into school absence jointly carried out by the Ministries of Health and Education.

Colds and stomach upsets were easily the commonest causes of missed lessons. But 20 percent of the absenteeism—one case in every five—proved to be due to non-medical causes.

Many children over 12 are being kept away to help in the home. Many more miss school because their parents' holidays fall in term-time.

Oversleeping is still a common cause of absence—especially among boys over 12. But playing truant is rare these days—boys under 7 being the worst offenders.

Nearly 10,000 children from 73 representative schools were involved in the survey. Homes were visited when teachers were suspicious of the reasons given for absence.

Dr. Roy Bransby, the Health Ministry scientist who organised the survey, is shocked by the lack of pride in good attendance these days.

"Parents should be congratulated when attendance is good, and notified when it is bad," urges Dr. Bransby.

COOKING FOR THE ESKIMO

By Ernest Dewhurst

"WHAT'S for dinner. Ma — bears' feet, reindeer soup, or seal flipper?" asks little Johnnie as he rushes in from school.

Not in the southernly clime where you live, of course. But in snowy Alaska in Eskimo homes, according to a neat little recipe book from these parts.

The "Eskimo Cookery Book" has been prepared by students of Shishmaref Day School, Alaska. It introduces some meals which send a shudder down the spine of we "southerners."

Imagine, for instance, eating fish with ice cream. Yet one recipe reads: "Lingcod eskimo ice-cream."

It offers this advice: First cook and boil the lingcod with water, and no salt. Remove fish bones and break into small pieces. Dry these and mix with eskimo ice cream. Add seal oil and water.

ADD BERRIES

Tasty? Perhaps so, but then Eskimo ice cream is not like ours!

Reindeer tallow is grated into small pieces and seal oil added slowly, while beating. Water is then added, while whipping, and seal oil and water are added until white and fluffy.

The recipe concludes: Any berries can be added.

Bear meat is another dish but the book says: "Most of the people like bear feet better than the meat."

Student Nellie Oikpovuk: "We cook them well and add salt. Four feet would take about one teaspoon of salt." And she advises: "Eat them with seal oil."

The average Eskimo household must consume large quantities of seal oil in a year in this land of the Midnight Sun.

The Cook Book stresses that seal is one of the most common kinds of food up there, and there are three kinds of seal—hair seal (common seal), spotted seal, and ribbon seal.

"We use them for food and skins for clothing and mukluks," says a writer.

Seal oil is made from the blubber next to the skin. The blubber is cut off and stored in seal tins. It is left in a warm spot, or during the summer it renders itself.

Other meals from the seal include seal meat, seals' bare feet (the flippers), cooked blubber—"old people always want to eat this"—and seal head.

LOTS OF THEM

Let us not forget walrus stew, caribou gravy, and reindeer caribou and clam soups. White whale and owl also appear on the menu.

Young Stephen Scottomoni has this to say about Eskimo tea: "We find them in hill, at Serpentine. They are little different than white men's tea. There's lots of them. Some people gather some for tea. They put them in kettle and let boil. They are dark green."

Native plants with curious names also provide food for the Eskimos; they include cranberries, blueberries, salmonberries and mouse leaves.

Profits from the little book will help the Alaska Crippled Children's Association.

Teacher Isabelle B. Bingham recalls that they had, talked about food needed for good health, and had listed foods available in Eskimo land.

She asked how mothers of students cooked their food.

And even though one little boy protested, "Eskimo don't have cook books," the idea took shape. Students brought recipes and points were offered for bringing them.

SERENDIPITY

MAYBE you pick horses with a pin; maybe you think that the day you look by accident at the small ad. in your paper will be the day you find the job you want. You may have no name for it—but the dictionary has. It is SERENDIPITY—the faculty of making happy finds by accident. It was coined by Horace Walpole, novelist son of a Prime Minister, in 1754. Pronounce it in five syllables: SERENDIPITY.

A COUGH SET ME THINKING

DO you cough violently when the doctor starts probing inside your ear? I do, so I found out why.

A branch of the nerve which serves the coughing mechanism runs close under the skin inside the ear. So touching it starts off a coughing fit.

The same main nerve also serves the stomach, and stimulates it to set free digestive juices.

The aldermen of old London could hardly have known this. But they are said to have improved their appetites at City banquets by rubbing the skin behind the ear.

For this reason, my doctor tells me, the nerve under the skin behind the ear is still known as "alderman's nerve."

JAY SNOOPER

★ THE JAY is as thrifty as the squirrel at laying by a store of acorns for the winter, and it is probably better at remembering where it has hidden them.

After an autumn snooze on jays in Hainault Forest, Essex, bird-watcher M. R. Chettleburgh reports:

During a daily stint in the oak woods a jay works ten hours, making about six flights to its "larder" every hour.

It carries an average of three acorns on each trip, and buries about 180 a day—more than 1,200 a week.

The acorns are hidden in separate places in a selected area, which may be as much as three-quarters of a mile from the oak wood. The bird seems to remember the exact position of each one.

"On every occasion I have watched a jay retrieve an acorn from a given spot, stopped, dug furiously with its bill and, in due course, has taken out an acorn."

Journey Into Fear Behind The Sealed Doors Of The Freedom Train

By Norman Lindhurst

Frankfurt.

A SEALED train chuffs away from track 19 of Frankfurt Railway Station every night at 7.55 on a cloak - and - dagger run through the heart of

Russian-controlled Germany to Berlin. Train No. 80609—The Berliner—is operated by the U.S. Army for Allied occupation personnel. It is guarded by hard-boiled American military police. Doors are locked and barred from the inside and window shades are kept drawn.

Once it enters the Soviet zone, nobody leaves or enters the train—not even the tomy-gun-toting Russian railway guards.

To board train 80609 you must have U.S. Army travel orders typed in English and Russian, with not one word misspelled.

If you are an American, Briton, Frenchman or even a Russian attached to any one of the four occupation forces, you are entitled to ride the sealed train to Berlin.

It is the only way the average Westerner will ever be able to travel into the Soviet zone reasonably secure from arrest and imprisonment.

And dozens of Western occupation personnel make the trip every week as much for the thrill as from necessity.

Come along with us for a ride on the sealed train on its dark run through Stalin's zone of slavery.

Through the grimy of Frankfurt Railway Station, its girders still hanging twisted and naked from bombing of the last war, we jostle with swarms of German travellers on the way to track 19, clutching travel orders and a railway ticket which cost 28 marks for the 400-mile journey.

The passageway to the train is barred by an American Army captain behind a podium, "TRAIN COMMANDER" spelled out in bright yellow letters on his maroon armband. Flanking the captain are two tough-looking military policemen.

After a searching inspection of our travel orders, the captain flings grunts, checks our names off his list, and dryly remarks:

"If there had been one error in your papers, no matter how small, I'd turn you back. The Russians can't enter the train, but they do have the right to check everybody's travel orders—and they always notice mistakes."

At 7.55, the German conductor on the platform blows his whistle. There is a last-minute sprint of passengers and then off we chug on the 12-hour ride into the darkness.

On the train are soldiers en route to join troop units in Berlin, diplomatic couriers handcuffed to briefcases stuffed with secret documents, and newspaper correspondents scenting "trouble" brewing in the divided city.

In one compartment, reposing in solitary splendour, is a Soviet liaison officer, who attentively observes the quilled Hessian fields, crumbling castles and U.S. Army installations as the train rumbles northward.

By the time train 80609 pulls up at Helmsdorf, on the Soviet zone border, it is 3.50 in the morning. All passengers have had strict orders to draw curtains and keep them down tight until the train enters West Berlin.

At Helmsdorf, the West German locomotive is uncoupled and a Soviet zone engine and crew take over the task of pulling the sealed train through the Russian zone to Berlin.

Soviet zone Germans are still barred, as are Soviet troops, from entering the sealed sleeping cars.

At 4.22, with a jolt and a lurch, train No. 80609 crosses the border and starts its three-hour run to Berlin. Now the Berliner and its handful of Allied passengers are on their own and at the mercy of the "Soviets. The train is in the hands of an East German Communist crew and proceeding through country thick with Soviet troops and jack-booted, black-uniformed "People's Police."

Up and down the corridors jump the American military police guards, banging on compartments and shouting: "Pull down your window shades! Keep them down until we arrive in Berlin!"

Iron bars protecting doors to the coaches are swung into place; locks are given a final check, and the trip into danger begins.

Is the trip really dangerous? The American Army believes it is, despite the fact that there have been few serious incidents. In a barred, heavily-guarded rear communications car, Army signal men maintain constant radio contact with Helmsdorf and West Berlin as the sealed train whistles through the night.

Progress reports continue, mile-by-mile, until the Berliner pulls in safely at the West Berlin Station.

At stations along the way, in the Soviet zone, passengers on the sealed train are awakened by loudspeakers blaring "Aml (American), go home!"

Although they aren't supposed to, the passengers peer furtively from behind the drawn curtains when the train stops for checking and water in Soviet zone stations.

They see the train commander, his interpreter and two American military policemen swing down to the station platform, where two Russian officers are waiting.

There is a brusque salute on both sides; the American captain hands the Russians a list of the passengers and their nationalities, and the two Soviets give it careful scrutiny.

Stations along the route blaze with huge Soviet propaganda posters, demanding, "End the division of Germany." "Down with the Western warmongers" and "Death to traitors."

Even in their darkened compartments, passengers on the sealed train can distinguish between West and East. Rolling northward from Helmsdorf, the train pitches from side to side on the run-down roadbed.

At 7.30 in the morning, our journey through danger ends when the sealed train pulls into a suburb of West Berlin.

Many there, still in nightgowns, stand at house windows waving.

The sealed train with West Berlin's visible link with the Western Allies—proof that Berlin still belongs to the West. Seeing the train glide in every morning gives them renewed strength to start the day.

Vanity

THE WOMAN WHO SPOONFEEDS THE OTHER WOMAN'S FAMISHED LITTLE PRIDES . . .

VANITY was her business. She ministered to it night and day for five years inside the high court of conceits—the ladies' room in the most celebrated dining place in the West End.

For five years, until she left the job to marry the restaurant manager, Maria Taylor cared for the woman customer's social equipage—her looks, her clothes, and her vanities.

Maria was the person who hung up all the best coats in town. "Mink means nothing to me," she remarked. Maria brushed the backs of the best suits. And Maria spoonfed a thousand famished little prides.

She learned what every customer likes to hear best—the sound of her own name. Whether the customer hadn't been in for months, or whether she turned up for lunch every day, she never forgot it—"Good evening, Mrs. . . . here's the parcel you left behind at lunch."

"Diners up from the country who don't come as very often particularly like you to remember the last time they were here. "And if I can't recall the name, I can always remember a face. It was a great help." Maria made a good living from her tips.

"Customers of all kinds like you to talk to them about something particularly theirs, a son out in Malaya, a new baby, an illness, their dogs, a new job. "They like you to notice a new hat. Sometimes a customer would say to me, 'I've just bought a new hat and my husband says I've got awful taste in hats. I'm juncing with him, do you think it looks all right?' "And I would say, if I thought it looked odd, 'It's charming, madam, but have you got it on at the right angle?'"

Art of service

MARIA perfected the art of wrapping a criticism in a compliment.

"A customer, it seems, enjoys the feeling of the service she gets as a bit better than any one else's."

"A woman wants to think that it is she who gets special attention. Some customers like me to turn on the warm water tap for them at the wash basin."

"Some like me to remember their special kind of soap. They like a comb that hasn't been used, a special shade of powder, or will expect me to know that they like tissues to put on the dressing-tables to protect a pale evening bag."

"But whatever it is, they like to think that you do these things for them alone."

Not all Maria's customers were good girls. "Some of them nip downstairs between the sweet and the coffee, tell their hosts upstairs that they have gone to tidy-up. They spend so long that sometimes the men ask if their girl friends are gasping to me."

"But they use the telephone in my room to ring up other boy friends," said Maria sadly. Her loyalties are always to the man who pays the bill on the premises.

Class distinction

NOT all Maria's customers were kind. "There's a class distinction between the attendant and the customer that some people—not our regulars of course—do their best to emphasise."

"You have to handle these people with kid gloves. But the more polite you are to them, the more cross they get. Once I said 'Thank you, as I always do when customers leave the room, to someone who hadn't left me a tip. And she flew at me.' "But most of Maria's customers take care of their looks. They particularly women over 40. They spend more time than anyone on themselves except women of all ages who are out to land a contract over a business lunch."

Most customers spend ten minutes to a quarter of an hour tidying themselves up before a meal.

"Lots of women won't bother to put on face powder, although they'd feel naked without a good lipstick," said Maria.

Once one of Maria's customers landed her in the kind of social fix which must be for her beauty. Her palting room attendants.

Maria had always longed to meet Irene Dunn, the film star, who was dining at the restaurant one night. The Mar-chioness of Curisbrooke, one of Maria's customers, promised to bring her down.

"Then, at about half past ten, a woman rushed into my room in a frightful state," said Maria. "She couldn't open her mouth because her dentures were having troubles with a petit-four."

"Just as I was pouring very hot water over the biscuit to try to melt it—down came the marchioness and Miss Dunne. I didn't know whether to go on melting the biscuit, apologise to her ladyship, shake hands with Mrs. Dunne, or what. It could only happen to me."

She's right.

Vanity

MIDAS TOUCH FOR THE MILLIONS

THE latest shape of vanity in a woman's jewellery is pictured here. The necklace is designed in fake gold—the newest stage in the development of the Midas Touch.

The chain is made of base metal changed into a gleaming gold. It has two special properties. All the jewellery made of it is as light as air and has a permanent non-tarnishable shine.

The new gold has flooded the jewellery market all over the country. The British firm which first brought the idea from Switzerland (where it was used for the first time on jewellery) and made the equipment that makes the gold, reported: "Our sales have increased 100 percent in the last year."

Jewellers are turning out gold neck chains, gold bracelets, gold earrings. In most West End stores there are two gold counters to one of pearls-and-rhinestones.

The new gold comes in the middle price range, the necklace in the photograph, gold mixed with black rings, costs 42s. 11d., the earrings 31s. 11d. (and out of the picture) a matching bracelet, 21s. 11d.

To Britain via Switzerland.

Vanity

EVEN MIRRORS THEMSELVES CHANGE IN STYLE

THE mirror business started from scratch when Eve first peered in a pool. Since then the urge of a woman to see how she looks has created a history and a trade.

In the first place, the mirror business was slow. It looked up the past of the looking-glass in the place where it is hidden—in the files at the Victoria and Albert Museum.

They told me that the first way a woman took a quick look at herself indoors was to gaze into polished bronze.

An Egyptian girl in 1400 B.C. owned a bronze mirror like the ones on sale here. The war with a polished round of the metal and a handle shaped like a girl.

An Englishwoman first glimpsed herself on the wall around the end of the 14th century. Proper backed mirror glass had been invented, the first shiny surface light enough to hang. The mirror business was under way by 1523, when the first factory started up.

Cromwell smashed the mirror trade. There is no record of mirror-making during his rule. But 50 years after his death, the beauty business was back with a bang.

A diarist observed that the women gazed into their mirrors from twelve till two, "holding their top-knots on their fore-heads straight upright."

Another wrote of a famous beauty: "She sacrificed her life for her beauty. Her palting room attendants.

Maria had always longed to meet Irene Dunn, the film

In the 18th century a woman could swing her mirror about on a polished wood frame with little drawers underneath. And on her dressing-room walls were some of the loveliest mirrors ever to be made.

At the close of the century, the leading expert on furniture wrote: "The evolution of the mirror loses all artistic interest."

But where the artists stopped, the merchants swooped in. The business in giving a woman the chance to take a quick look at herself has become swiftly competitive. Each manufacturer strives to cut down his prices.

The leading London supplier of powder compacts reported: "Three years ago we brought out a compact at 21. Our competitors produced one for 15s."

"We thrust back with a number of 12s. 6d. They replied with a style at 10s. 6d. Last Christmas we mopped up the market with our cheapest line yet at 7s. 6d."

There's a technique about looking your best in a tiara. For example, the ribbons which keep it on must never show. They can be matched exactly to the wearer's hair colour at the point of jewellery where they keep tiaras. All shades are in stock from snow-white to platinum blonde. Hair must be suitably arranged, and be long enough to tuck over the ribbons. A short cut is not quite the thing to wear with a tiara, although we make tiaras to suit any hair-style," said the director of a tiara-making firm.

And most new peacocks feel they look their best in antique tiaras. The director remarked: "They prefer the sort of style that look as if they had been in the family for centuries."

Part of this job is to sell what the firm calls "head ornaments," priced from £750 to £45,000.

A CODE of private vanities has been created by the tiara-wearing classes. I talked recently to a man who is peculiarly aware of them. This Coronation year, a director of one of those international jewellery firms in Bond Street (or "The Street," as he calls it).

Part of this job is to sell what the firm calls "head ornaments," priced from £750 to £45,000.

The summer story will be . . .

TOLD IN THE MATERIAL

By Hazel Meyrick

IT is in the fabric, not the styling, that the summer dress story will be told this year. For the fashion houses have turned their backs on design to concentrate on new and unusual materials.

The mandarin collar has bowed itself out of popularity and nothing has come along to replace it, except perhaps that deep scooped-out "V" neckline worn by the Duchess of Kent, which most people are too cautious to try.

It seems that British women are at last catching on to the idea of an all-year-round cotton wardrobe. Many London stores say cotton dresses are already being bought in dozens—even when it is snowing outside. Popular are "Coronation" prints, bright Bayadere patterns flecked with gilt, and jungle designs in vivid colourings.

with the Earl Marshal's decree that non-titled women attending the Coronation ceremony should wear a "hair covering in the form of a veil."

Looking like a half-hat, the Coronilla is made in lace and satin with a froth of tulle veiling at the back. Worn with these caps are elbow-length gloves (also by order of the Earl Marshal) and ballet-length dresses in brocade and lame.

Cap Of State

A coronet can cost up to £1,000, so, for the peeress with more taste than money, Hartnell has designed a Cap of State. Made from crimson velvet trimmed with a discreet simulation of ermine, the crown of the cap is outlined by gold wire, trimmed with four drop pearls.

Coronations complain of lack of orders for Coronation gowns. But peeresses are loth to buy these when they may not have the opportunity to wear them. Places at the Abbey are chosen by ballot and it seems no-one wants to tempt her luck in the draw by ordering her dress too far ahead.

Grey Vichy cotton was almost a national costume in France last year. Now denim, its tougher sister, is being taken up with equal enthusiasm in London.

The model dress houses play for safety and use charcoal-grey denim fied with white pique. But it can also be seen in off-key colourings like pink-grey and green-grey. Strung round skirt hems and on pockets is white rick-rack trimming with as many rows of braid as on an admiral's uniform. Often these dresses have an attractive glazed finish which keeps them looking fresh and crisp.

Pillow-case Ticking

An American film star visited London recently wearing a coat made from striped pillow-case ticking. Suddenly, this fabric has been taken up by the fashion houses as something new and amusing. Dresses made from ticking come in simple button-through designs, inexpensive in price. Many have full skirts which will stand away from the hips, undisturbed by petticoats.

Other tough-looking dresses, in slubbed cotton tweed this time, have workman-like skirts with trouser pleats in them, gigantic pockets that could carry your shopping, and cool bateau necklines.

Another material to catch the designer's eye this year is man's shirting. It is made into tailored dresses complete with starched collars and cuffs—with cuff links to complete the illusion. One dress even has a spare collar sewn onto the skirt as a pocket; another sports a bow-tie.

New Fabric

For a cool, open-air look there are summer separates made in a new fabric called Jerve Anglaise. It is really that material, rayon stockinette, punctured with a lace pattern like broderie Anglaise. Unwashable, packable and easily washable, it can be found in anything from high-necked shirts worn under a linen suit to a decollete cocktail blouse with parasol sleeves.

The Coronilla is, in the new, a cap designed by Norman Hartnell. No empty

Crown Roast of Lamb

Order 2 racks of lamb made into a "crown roast." Let stand 12 hrs. in the tenderizing mar-inate given at the end of this column. Fill the centre with a well-seasoned forcemeat made with ground lamb-and-veal Dust with 1 tbsp. enriched flour

mixed with ¼ tsp. pepper and 1½ tsp. each salt and monosodium glutamate powder.

Place in a roasting pan; slip
a small thick piece of salt pork on top of each exposed bone to prevent charring and to baste the meat. Allow 20 min.
to each pound. Start the oven
at 400-425° F.; after 20 min.
reduce the heat to 350° F. Baste with the fat in the pan; add a little more if necessary.

After the meat is cooked, remove the salt pork and replace with "culet" trills. Garnish with parsley, pickled crab-apples.

Salad Dressing

Beat together 3 tbsp. each olive and vegetable oil, 2 tsp. white vinegar, ¼ tsp. salt, ¼ tsp.

pepper and ¼ tsp. curry powder.
Then beat in 2 tbsp. yogurt.

Orange-Jellied Fresh Fruit

Add 2 envelopes unflavoured gelatin to ½ c. reconstituted frozen orange juice. Stand 5
min. Add 1 c. heated orange juice; stir until the gelatin dissolves. Stir in 2 tbsp. each mild-flavoured honey and lemon juice. Add 2 c. cold orange juice.

Rinse a 3-pt. mould with cold water. Put in 3 c. mixed diced plums, pears, apples, orange sections and halved seedless grapes. Pour in the gelatin.
Refrigerate 6 hrs. or until firm.
Unmould on a bed of fresh mint.
Garnish with small bunches of seedless green grapes.

Marinade for Crown Roast

Combine 2 shredded peeled onions, garlic, 2 sliced peeled potatoes, 2 tsp. salt, ¼ tsp. pepper, ¼ c. wine vinegar and ¼ c.
water. Pour over the lamb;
cover and refrigerate 12 hrs. to season and tenderise. Turn over the meat twice.

Child's School And Play Togs That Can Go Into The Washer

By ELEANOR ROSS

SHOPPING for the kinder-gartener's wardrobe can be a real joy. It is a cinch to get together all-washable school and play togs that are pretty,
too. Dresses, slacks, sweaters, snowsuits and even coats are made of fabrics that let them go right into the washer. Less ironing, too, thanks to new wrinkle-resistant finishes and synthetic fabrics that straighten out as they dry.

The first synthetic that comes to mind is the new acrylic fibers. You'll find dresses for little girls that are done in chambray and linen-like weaves and in a handsome smooth plain blend that stay fresh all day.
Into the tub or washer for a brief sudsing and rinsing, then hang up to dry. No ironing needed! The same easy "care"
will keep plima-nylon frocks
fresh as a daisy.

WASHABLE WINTER COAT

A fully washable coat, of good winter weight, comes in the acrylic fabric with an acrylic fleece lining. This, too, goes into the washer and is a cinch to care for. It comes in lovely light colours, too.

Now finishes on cottons account for much of the handsome styling. Cotton dresses come with a silky glaze for Slater, and for Brother there are easy-to-care-for cotton shirts that are toasty-warm and cozy.

Remember the plaid skirt of last year and the trouble Mama had in keeping pleats looking crisp? Today the classic pleated skirt or jumper comes in a blend with permanent pleats that stay put no matter how many times the garment goes into the soapsuds.

Brother's long pants need no longer bag at the knee. Get them in a nylon-wool blend for extra sturdiness and shrink-resistance. These, too, can be washed in the machine. Press lightly under a damp cloth, setting the iron dial lower than usual for wool.

The corduroy story is better than ever this season. Little boys will sport corduroy shirts with knitted turtle-necks, and corduroy slacks with plaid turn-up cuffs. Corduroy coveralls for the very youngest ones have plaid cotton Peter Pan collars.

Washing corduroy is easy.
Keep colours separate unless you have a colourfast guarantee, wash through lukewarm suds, using a soft brush on soiled cuffs and hemlines, rinse well, do not wring, and let drip
dry. Fluff up the pile if need-be with a stiff brush after the garment has dried thoroughly.
Very often, a gentle shaking is all that is needed.

Cotton tweeds are new and smart, and appear in charming clothes for children as well as for adults. Everything from jumpers for Sister to smart suits for boys uses cotton tweed.

There are even cotton tweed
co-ordinates for small fry.

NYLON SWEATERS

In the knitwear department,
nylon sweaters are plentiful.
These are warm, pretty, easy to wash, and keep their shape
in sud, so they require none of that blocking or a special form, and dry in a jiffy.

More washable woollens are showing up, too. It's wise to hunt for the tag that tells the shopper whether the wool has been treated for shrink-resistance or not. Wool jersey middies for big or little girls can be had that are fine sellers in the soapbox. All in all, it looks like a good clothes deal for Mother and all that fry who at last are going to enjoy smart clothes that are as practical as they are pretty.

New Type Of Diplomat

By Patrick Maitland, M.P.

A SYMBOL of the new diplomacy and of Great Britain's changed relationship with members of the Commonwealth is to be found in the appointment of Mr. George Middleton, lately Counsellor at the British Embassy in Tehran, to be Deputy High Commissioner in New Delhi—this is, for practical purposes, deputy Ambassador to India.

Mr. Middleton, who is in his early forties, is an energetic and resourceful person. He joined the Foreign Office by way of the Consular Service, and was British Consul in the south-east Polish city of Lwow during the frantic days of Nazi Germany's invasion of Poland. The British Embassy in Warsaw, like those of other countries, fled with the Polish Government and eventually reached Rumania.

The route from Warsaw to Bucharest led, for most people, through the Salician city of Lwow, which is now inside the Soviet Union. Thus to Mr. Middleton there fell an abundance of emergency tasks to facilitate the evacuation of important personnel, Polish as well as British. Much required to be improvised without reference to the rules or precedent.

PIMPERNEL

In the emergency of issuing passports to persons who might have lost them or possibly never had them a Consul will be held responsible for errors of judgment; little allowance is made for the trying conditions under which the judgment was exercised. But there were few, if any, official complaints afterwards.

For one thing Mr. Middleton distinguished himself as a modern Scarlet Pimpernel, securing the escape of some scores of important but little-known personalities under the very noses of German Gestapo men. And he never lost his head, or his heart.

His sojourn in Poland and Rumania followed by a stretch at Genoa, then Madeira and the second of two stretches in the United States. America is a country, therefore, of whose streamlined business as well as gangster methods he is fully abreast. A superficial impression of this promising young diplomat might be that he is a devil-may-care kind of person. At all events, he carries his cares lightly and possesses a quality that is highly respected among Orientals—an appearance of calm.

This is the man who found himself Counsellor of the British Embassy in Tehran after the Ambassador, Sir Francis Shepherd, had been recalled. He was thus left in charge, and for many months there fell to him the curious obligation of visiting Persia's enigmatic and hysterical Premier, who would often enough be in bed when an Ambassador called. No man without a high sense of humour could endure such a task for long, least of all retain an equable temper. To visit a Prime Minister, and be roundly abused for your pains, is not in itself agreeable.

EXODUS

As Charge d'Affaires, Mr. Middleton was responsible for the safe conduct of the British colony out of Persia when relations were severed. And throughout many trying months of provocation and insult, when it was sport to assault British subjects and forcefully mistreat them, Mr. Middleton's job was to hold on and keep steady. He conducted the final evacuation without incident and brought his charges out safely—a tribute to his qualities both as organizer and leader.

Such is the type of person, very far from a conventional "old school tie" diplomatist, who has been promoted to be Deputy High Commissioner in New Delhi. The choice has fallen on a person of proven courage and integrity. Yet not only so, but throughout the exciting adventures which have been Mr. Middleton's story, he has shown himself both a shrewd observer and a competent reporter. His despatches are straightforward and sound.

SYMBOL

In the complexity of Great Britain's postwar position, the heart of an expanding Commonwealth spilling over into Asia and a mighty political force in that teeming continent, the "Embassy" for that is what it is, to New Delhi perhaps matches the Embassy to Washington for its importance. For here are new paths being trodden by diplomacy and politics.

Indeed, India's relations with Britain were opened by a former St. Pancras Borough Councillor and London politician—Mr. Krishna Menon, now Pandit Nehru's representative at the United Nations. It accords with the daring, experimental pattern of these vital new relationships that an altogether unorthodox choice should be made for the number two post in New Delhi. Mr. Middleton is something of a symbol of the new and vigorous in British diplomacy.

No flesh-and-blood man could take it!

SMASH HITS No 5

introduces Eric Boon and Danahar into the punch-a-line China Mail big fight series

by PETER WILSON

THERE never was a fight like this between two Englishmen—not at least in the 25 years that I have been sweating at the ring-sides of the world.

When Eric Boon defended his lightweight championship against Arthur Danahar at Harringay Arena on February 28, 1939, the preliminary ballyhoo reached a scale never before approached in Britain.

And for the first time in the country—and very nearly the last—half as many people again outside the hall "saw" the contest.

Nearly 14 years ago television was still something of a toy, but the showman John Harding, then a new manager of the National Sporting Club, which had sponsored Danahar from the time he turned professional after winning the ABA lightweight title in 1937, had the vision of what TV was going to become.

And so the Marble Arch Pavilion and the nearby Mongoose News Theatre, as well as The Tatler Cinema in the Charing Cross Road, were all wired for "big-screen" television, and people were glad to pay as much as a guinea—a pretty considerable sum in those happy prewar days—to watch.

The youngest

OTHER "oddities" of the light were that Boon and Danahar were the youngest pair ever to contest a British title. Boon, who had won the title only two months before, was still a mere 19; Danahar a year older.

Yet it was Danahar, who, professionally speaking, was the "novice." This was only his 15th paid fight and he had never travelled more than eight rounds previously.

Boon had had something like 75 recorded bouts and a great many more which never appeared in the books. He had several times gone ten rounds and once, when beating Dave Crowley for the championship, nearly 13.

But if the experience was with the champion, Danahar had most of the important physical advantages. At 5 ft. 8 in., he was some four inches taller and his reach at 71 ins. was five inches longer than Boon's.

The background of the youths was as different as their appearance and their style. Boon was a blacksmith's boy, from the country town of Chatteris, in Cambridgeshire. The only "green belt" Danahar knew was the one at Bethnal—just try it and find.

Classic clash

THAT was the set-up then when the thick-thighed blacksmith's boy with the light, wavy hair and the engaging grin looked across the ring at the dark, sallow, and rather drawn Londoner.

From the very first bell it was the classic clash between the boxer and the fighter. Danahar sprang erect like a vivified sporting print of one of the old bare-knuckle pugilists from whom he was descended. Boon, accentuating the difference in their height by crouching, bobbing, and weaving in the American style, sought to break his man in half with thunderous thumps to the body.

No quarter

FURTHERMORE, he countered sharply and accurately with rights to the head—and one of these was to have a nearly definitive bearing on the ultimate outcome.

The first round had undoubtedly gone to the challenger, and it set a pattern of leather and blood and bayonet for the succeeding six sessions. There was no suspicion of quarter being asked or given, but the fight was one of the most scrupulously fair I can remember.

At the end of the seventh a stranger coming into the hall would have thought that Danahar was the champion, faced by a strong, very game, but utterly outclassed opponent.

I had given every round to the challenger, and he still seemed as strong as ever. So, of course, did Boon, but the great weight of his punches was useless since he could not avoid the flesh-and-bone bayonet of Danahar's left and as round succeeded round Arthur stroled back to his corner smiling a little with tight lips and with his hair parting still unruffled.

The eighth round looked like being a carbon copy of the preceding seven, and then after a minute a dramatic change transformed what had been a runaway victory into a nip-and-tuck fight. After 22 minutes of fighting Boon finally got a clean shot with his right to Danahar's jaw.

Its effect was shattering. Danahar dropped as though he had been shot and was very glad to take the full count of him. First a left hook put him down, then a right swing, then a left hook again. Each count was for nine.

The Londoner's world must have been a hideous fantasy of roaring crowd, whirling canvas, flying leather which up-ended him, threatened to cave in his ribs, scrambled his brain, and left him like a blind man on a merry-go-round.

But, where a flesh-and-blood man would have been led or carried away by now, the imperishable flame burning inside this cockney scrapper brought him out for the fourteenth round.

Boon propped him up on the end of his left and then javelined a right to the point of his trembling chin. Danahar went down all of a heap, but even then he would not strike his colours.

The end

HE hauled himself up by the ropes, hand over hand until he stood almost erect, but a trembling target, and then refocused his eyes and then refocused his courage and then refocused his bravery for another day.

It was the end of one of the truly great fights of the past decade and a half.

They fought once more after the war, but like so many encounters of a notable first performance it did not compare with the first. Danahar stopped Boon in the fifth round with Eric complaining bitterly that he had been hit low.

Neither man was the fighter he had been and, alas, shortly afterwards came the tragic news that Danahar had contracted a serious illness.

Boon, too, formerly the real-life "golden boy" of the ring, never recaptured his former greatness, and finally the British Boxing Board of Control refused to license him any longer.

The last I heard of him he was losing to fighters in Australia who were not worthy to lace his ring boots when he was in his prime.

Unlucky 13th

BUT a second look would have told a different story, for the steel-ribbed, rock-jawed champion seemed impervious to all punishment, and Danahar was weakening ever more rapidly. Just at the end of the round Boon flashed in a right, and again the Londoner was on the canvas, the bell interrupting the count at four.

And now it was all Boon, although technically he was still behind on points. In the twelfth two more of the sledge-hammer blows which Boon had learned the hard way in the smelly left Danahar fumbling on the canvas.

The unlucky thirteenth must have been a nightmare for AIR-WICK is new. It works in a new way—not to cover up smells, but to destroy them in the air. You simply unscrew the cap, pull up the wick and put the bottle on a high shelf. As Air-wick evaporates, unwanted indoor smells disappear like magic. Air-wick contains chlorophyll, the wonderful substance that keeps all growing plants fresh and green. It does indoors what nature does outdoors—keeps the air constantly refreshed.

Use Air-wick all over the house, wherever you want a fresh, smell-free atmosphere. Air-wick is indispensable, too, in clubs, hotels, offices and hospitals.

Lloyd's 3000 put a price on Test weather

by
Marshall PUGH

LLOYD'S, in London's Leadenhall Street, the insurance market place for all the world, is ready to cover all the triumphs and disasters of Coronation Year. In the acre of cream marble which they call simply "The Room," the 3,000 underwriters of Lloyd's are prepared to cover component of the Coronation itself. They quote a flat 27 10s. per £100 against it not taking place in June.

Some cricket clubs, with the Australian cricket tour in mind, are busy making certain now that rain will not upset summer expectations—in their tills. Lloyd's, quoting against rain stopping play, demand higher premiums against the skies of Lancashire and Glamorgan, than against the skies of Kent.

CALLER'S VOICE

The Caller's voice echoes round the marble acre, like the voice of a swimming instructor in a public bath. He may be calling brokers to the business of insuring cricketers against rain, of insuring speedway cyclists or horses against accident. Or he may be calling them to order things. For there are few risks so singular that Lloyd's will not quote against them.

They issued a policy against a golfer holing out in one and having to buy a round of drinks. Golfers with handicaps of 16-22 solemnly renewed their policies each year. Then the Royal and Ancient intervened and warned the Committee of Lloyd's that the policy was imperilling golfers' amateur status.

They issued a policy insuring a retired Indian Army officer against death by "violent external means." He had been warned by a soothsayer that his death would be violent. Twenty years after that warning, the officer slipped and fell downstairs. Lloyd's underwriters arranged full payment for his relatives.

They issue policies insuring American phantoms against the financial risk of making unlawful arrests accidentally. But the main topic at Lloyd's just now is the new building slowly rising in Lime Street. Lloyd's has needed larger premises. The underwriters troubled their aggregate premium income between 1938 and 1947. That premium income amounted in 1948 to £104,000,000. It is still going up—and Lloyd's believe in moving with the times.

The present building in Leadenhall Street has been use for only 25 years and will be just an annex for the Lime Street building in the next few years. Leadenhall Street Lloyd's, though it looks like a monstrous war memorial, has been but a temporary shelter for live enterprise.

That enterprise has been very live indeed. It will be livelier still in Coronation Year. But for each policy which hangs oddly round the Room, there will be a thousand policies with the roll call of well-tempered mediocrity.

CORONATION YEAR

Underwriters, quoting to retain their hold on the world marine insurance market, will not display undue interest in the risk of borough employees clipping while capturing pigeons on borough states. They will be more concerned with policies against man-made fires in Macclesfield than against foreign earthquakes, tornadoes, and other Acts of God.

In Coronation Year, underwriters will insure test pilots against the Sound Barrier. But, on the floor beneath the Room, Lloyd's printers are still describing ships' captains as "the masters under God." The masters under God, on Lloyd's policies, continue to be "good ships" and are insured against loss of war, piracy, robbery, and other Acts of God.

ing at Sea, Arrests, Restraints, Detainments of all Kings, Princes and People.

The Loss Book, which still devotes the same space to the sinking of a liner or a lighter, will continue to be kept with a quill, in 1953.

Lloyd's, in fact, becomes more conservative with the passage of time. In 1813, a gentleman named Dorrington insured against Napoleon being killed or taken prisoner before the month of May and June. The premium was a miserable three guineas per hundred. Napoleon was doing well at the time. In 1953, any man who wanted to insure Mao Tse Tung at Lloyd's would have to show considerable Proof of Interest. Underwriting a gamble is not allowed.

Next year, in one rapidly expanding field of insurance, Lloyd's will not be interested at all. This is insurance against bad debts by which a company can protect itself against a customer's refusal to pay.

Bad debts are no concern of Lloyd's. They have none of their own. For Lloyd's is still gathering for individuals, a market place, a club—a place with thousands of policies and no policy of its own. Each underwriting syndicate is, in business for itself. Their overheads are lower than those of insurance companies. They are making their own money.

Each underwriter is financially responsible for his share of any risk, down to his last back shilling.

The SNAPSHOT GUILD

A low camera angle makes this shot a good example of what can be done in picturing carnivals.

Carnival Capers

OFF hand I know of nothing more difficult for me to do than drive past a carnival without stopping to look at the rats, take a turn or two on the ferris wheel, or try to knock down a pyramid of bottles with my fading fast ball.

But for the picture taker a carnival has even more to offer. For there are countless picture subjects everywhere on the midway. And all the fun of such an affair can be captured on film.

A ready camera, imagination, and an eye for good subject matter are all you need to make a carnival picture story. Watch for the interesting shots—a banker extolling the merits of his fast show, a child eating spun cotton candy, a couple riding the ferris wheel.

None of these shots are unusual, perhaps. But there's where imagination comes in. Take the ferris wheel, for example. It's a far more effective picture taken when the cage was high in the sky—then a shot of the same subject would be if taken with the cage near the ground. The low camera angle makes the picture.

Imagination also played a major part in another excellent carnival picture I saw recently. It was a night shot, a time exposure of several seconds' duration. The camera man who made the picture had been intrigued by the streaks of light traced in the darkness by an air car rattling about a shaft. So he had set up his camera firmly, opened his shutter, and let the lights trace a pattern of ovals and circles on his negative.

These are merely a few hints, of course, for pictures you might try. The big thing is to try them. For there's no question that you will find dozens of picture possibilities if you go to a carnival with your camera loaded and ready to shoot. And, in shooting them, you will find you learn as you go along. This pleasure you get from your camera and your skill in using it both increase the more you make use of it.

Sir Arthur Finds A Magic Life...

A PATTERN OF ISLANDS.
By Arthur Grimble. Murray. 18s. 250 pages.

MIDWAY between Hawaii and Australia a string of coral atolls, the Gilbert and Ellice Group, lift their palm fronds above the Pacific surf.

They are peopled by a handsome and dignified race. From one island vast quantities of phosphates are exported, without which the pastures of the Southern Hemisphere would fall.

They are administered by a handful of devoted British colonial officers, who were joined not long before the 1914-18 war by a romantic, inquisitive and skilful young cadet named Arthur Grimble.

Nearly 40 years after his first glimpse of the Pacific, Grimble, now immensely experienced but no less romantic than in 1913, puts down on paper some recollections of his life among the islands and their people. It is in no sense an apology for British colonial rule.

the comedy and the magic of island life, even if the "magic" has at times a hard fight against insect plagues, tedious food, scanty medical services and other afflictions.

But the reader will, nevertheless, carry away from this memorable book an indelible impression of the boon conferred on a fine race by British rule. "The Gilbertese," says Grimble in a significant sentence, "are a few water-side villages before the British protectorate" (of 1902).

Until then, each house must be a fort; clan feuds were deathless; war was ferocious and unceasing.

The Islanders love history, the manners, noble gestures, "We dwell among gentlefolk in these parts," said Grimble's superior.

Before long, Grimble was adopted into one of the clans. The ceremony, solemn and painful, included the tattooing of a snake on his arm.

As tradition dictated, two little girls wept and screamed on his behalf during the operation while Grimble, with a rather haggard smile kept murmuring how agreeable it all was.

It was not his only Pacific ordeal. The young Gilbertese hunt the giant octopus in pairs under-water. One man acts as bait, allowing the monster to pinion him. His partner dives, prised the octopus from its rock and bites between the eyes, causing instant death. Any other method of killing a big octopus would be regarded as unorthodox.

Grimble showed an incautious interest in the hunt. Its amusing simplicity was explained. He was offered the role of decoy. Retreat was impossible. "Remember, one hand for your eyes," said someone, as Grimble dived. A creditable episode, the horror and humour of which lose nothing in his telling.

Native customs are a snare for the young officer. A tricky situation arose when Grimble's wife, Missie, expecting a baby, chanced to give a scent bottle to a village girl. Voice-of-the-Tide, who called on the Grimbles in tears after half an hour, the matter was cleared up.

A high-born Gilbertese lady, in the last months of pregnancy, selects an unmarried friend for the comfort of her husband, handing over some sweet-scented object as the sign of her choice. Voice-of-the-Tide, deeply appreciative as the was of the gesture, had a sweet heart.

"And if you had not had a sweetheart?" asked Mrs. Grimble. It was painfully evident that Voice-of-the-Tide would not have felt differently. "I left them to their laughter. I had a few words to say in the village—alone."

Grimble's emaciated frame, which made no little appeal to Voice-of-the-Tide, brought him his most remarkable experience.

A Gilbertese friend prescribed porpoise-meat as a cure for this misfortune and engaged the services of his cousin, a hereditary porpoise-caller. This functionary went into a swoon, which ended only when he shouted, "They come! They come!" And there, out in the lagoon, approaching and finally stopping gently on to the beach, was a whole flotilla of porpoises.

"The men leaned down to throw their arms around the great barrel and pass them over the ridges. They showed not the least sign of alarm. It was as if their single wish was to get to the beach."

A chief's portion of the meat was set aside for Grimble. He could not bring himself to eat it. Nor does he attempt to explain the strange occurrence.

Grimble tells how a bankrupt trading concern became the wealthy and benevolent British Phosphate Company because a sharp-eyed young man thought that a piece of rock looked like phosphate. It was almost pure phosphate. The Phosphate Company has been one of the most enlightened enterprises in the world and a prime factor (says Grimble) in saving the Gilbertese from the disintegrating effects of Japanese invasion and American occupation.

If the British Empire were to be wiped out tomorrow, and no other role of it survived, A Pattern of Islands would enable future readers to say: "So that is what the Empire was like; such were the men who manned its outposts—and to regret the passing of a unique, even if fallible, instrument for the dissemination of happiness and civilization through the world."

SNOOKER

By Horace Lindrum
(World Professional Snooker Champion)

On the surface there appears to be no end to the list of fundamentals of Snooker, the knowledge of which enables you to improve your game. However, if you are keen enough to practise from the positions given in my diagrams until your mind becomes photographic, the game will become progressively easier so that eventually you will wonder how you ever thought certain positions could be difficult.

These diagrams are drawn to give playing readers an idea of the burst of the cue-ball from the object-ball after the point of impact. If you can photograph these things in your mind it will help considerably in improving your knowledge of angles and speed.

Dealing with the situation illustrated in last week's diagram, my first stroke would be to pot the red into the top left-hand corner pocket; I would strike the cue-ball low to leave it in position X1.

Because there are three reds clustered together near the pink spot which will not go anywhere, I pot the black into the top right-hand corner pocket at the same time screwing my white ball into the reds.

From position X2 my next shot is to pot the red delicately into the top right-hand corner pocket and follow through with the white ball to leave an angle pot on the black into the top left-hand corner pocket. From X3, playing the black with top on my ball I make contact with the top cushion and then proceed to the top left-hand side cushion and come to rest in position X4.

To continue my break it is necessary for me to play the red into the right-hand middle pocket and delicately screw the white ball towards the top end to leave another angle pot (X5) on the black.

Once again addressing the cue-ball on top and making a follow-through cue delivery, I let the white ball contact the top cushion and the top left-hand side cushion for the red into the right-hand middle pocket. I am now at X6.

When tackling the last remaining red for the right-hand middle pocket, I must play the stroke with careful strength to bring my white into line for an angle pot (X7) into the blue into the left-hand middle pocket.

Strength is needed for my next stroke. When I play the blue I must leave my ball in such a position on the yellow to get the brown off the cushion.

From X8, with my tip addressing the cue-ball as low as possible, I pot the yellow into the bottom right-hand corner pocket and screw on to the cushion before making contact with the brown; this allows the white ball to come out for the green to position X9.

Again playing my ball underneath, I pot the green into the bottom left-hand corner pocket and delicately screw on to the left-hand side cushion with enough speed to come to rest in position X10.

The pink at this stage is the awkward ball. So I must pot the brown and leave the cue-ball in a favourable position on the blue. I do this by coming off the right middle pocket cushion and resting in position X11 as shown. To pot the blue into the left-hand middle pocket with a follow-through delivery to send the cue-ball on to the left-hand side cushion for position on the pink, X12. Obviously, the pink is potted into the top left-hand corner pocket stunning the white ball off the top cushion for position on the black marked X13.

RAF Could Beat Scorpions At Kai Tak Today

By "THE ZOMBIE"

The race for Senior Cricket League honours enters its final stretch this afternoon with the Optimists holding a seven-point lead over their nearest rivals, Scorpions, who have one match in hand.

Royal Air Force, who are two points behind the Scorpions in as many games played, Reccelo and KCC are all, however, still within striking distance, even though it looks as if the race has now narrowed down to only the two Hongkong Cricket Club teams.

For Optimists, this last stretch will be their hardest for in the path of their remaining matches lie all the other clubs of this year's Senior League—Reccelo whom they will meet today, Craigengower, Scorpions, RAF and KCC, every one of whom is capable of setting back their hopes.

Scorpions are sure at least of three of their remaining six matches—against University, IRC and Navy—and Optimists will really have to show all their worth in their remaining matches. Their first real test comes this afternoon when they take on Reccelo.

Of the two key-matches this afternoon, the more important one will be that between RAF and Scorpions at Kai Tak. Whereas Optimists can still afford to lose one more match, one further defeat for Scorpions will practically spell the end of their hopes of retaining the title. From the line-ups of the two teams and record of achievement of the RAF on their home wicket in the current and past seasons, this defeat for Scorpions is in my opinion a likely one as they will be without both Alec Pearce and C.B. Connell this time.

On the other hand, the Air-men have been greatly strengthened by the inclusion of their Second Division all-rounder, Mitchell, who last week did more than his share by taking four wickets and scoring 16 runs.

LEACH TO THE RESCUE?

The Scorpions will have to fight really hard this afternoon and I won't be surprised to see veteran Donald Leach thick in the fray again.

In the match between Scorpions and Kowloon Cricket Club last Saturday, Leach relieved again some of his glorious cricketing past when he just narrowly failed to carry his side to victory and fully earned the honour of being the cricketer of the week.

With all the Scorpions' top bats already out, he carried the score to within reach of victory. For nearly the whole of two overs each delivery found him out of the crease, and in one over three successive cover drives came off his bat.

With 16 runs needed for a win in the last over, Muldoon paused

You To Play Until Next Week

From this position you can gain excellent practice in delicate stun and screw shots. How would you proceed to clear the table? (Next week Horace Lindrum will demonstrate what he would do).

HONGKONG AND SINGAPORE MEET IN AW HOE CUP MATCH THIS AFTERNOON

By "SPIV"

Local soccer sees the opening of its 1952-1953 "International match season" this afternoon with the second annual Interport match between Hongkong and Singapore for the Aw Hoe Cup which was jointly presented by the Singapore and Hongkong Football Association last year in memory of the late Mr Aw Hoe.

Hongkong went down to Singapore last April to open the series and were held to a goalless draw in the first match. Despite extra-time, the replay ended in another draw of 2-2, leaving Hongkong and Singapore joint holders of the trophy, which made it a fitting beginning to the series.

Both the HKFA and CNAFA have done the best of a difficult job of choosing three teams to meet the visitors, and the selection of two completely different teams for the Interport and Selection XI is a commendable gesture on the part of the HKFA.

FOUR NEW "CAPS"

At least four players will receive their first Interport "caps" this afternoon. Amongst them Lau Yee are as yet a new and untried full-back combination, and former Korean star Kim Kyu-hwan of Kwong Wah makes his first appearance for the Colony at centre-half.

Gardner, who narrowly missed his Interport cap last year when he chose to represent the Colony in an Interport hockey match scheduled for the same day, will be given the honour of leading the forward line this afternoon.

The playing of the new full-back combination of Armstrong and Lau Yee is a bold experiment on the part of the HKFA, aimed undoubtedly at recruiting new blood into the full-back berth and also at putting up a combination that is fast and speedy enough to match their opponents.

Although Kim Kyu-hwan is not up to the standard of last year's Interport captain, Tann, he is an excellent forward, and probably the best among the local players available and the half line is the best that the Colony can put up.

With the exception of Gardner, the Interport forwards are all automatic choices, and here again the HKFA have made a wise move in trying to solve the centre-forward problem—a position which no local player has successfully filled for the last few years.

If only Gardner will concentrate on making the openings for his two inside men and leave the scoring to them, his speed and hockey-like short passes will make him an ideal centre-forward to his inside men.

BEYOND CRITICISM

Both the Hongkong Selection and Combined Chinese XI's are beyond criticism, although personally I should have liked Adams of Army to be tried at left-back after his magnificent performances in League matches and in view of his potentialities as an excellent left-back.

Two notable absences in the series of matches will be Yue Cheuk-yin and Ko Po-keung, and if consideration of their omission has been in any way based on their failure to turn up for a recent representative match, this decision is a laudable one which will certainly be upheld by the sports-loving public.

It is high time that so-called local "stars", be it in soccer or any other branch of sport, be made to realise that they are not indispensable.

Miller, Au Chi-yin, Etheridge, Chu Wing-keung and Wilson are the other missing players from last year's team which played the visitors at Singapore.

The Singapore team headed by their Manager, Mr. Soh Chee-soon, are currently acting as President of the Singapore Amateur Football Association, and their coach, Mr. Lim Yung-ling, and consisting of 17 players arrived in Hongkong by air yesterday.

They are made up of a number of youthful players and include at least eight players who have already been seen in action here—their star goalkeeper Chu Cheong-seng, right-back Yip Chong-kum, right-half Foo Hee-jong, left-half Ho Hin-weng, inside-right Aw Boon-seng, centre-forward Awang Bakar, inside-left Ismail Yusoff and right-wing Mohd. Noor Suleiman.

Two conspicuous absences among them are J. Vass, who gave some grand displays as centre-half last year, and their regular left-back, Soh Teow-keng.

FAST SOCCER

Fast soccer should be the order of the day in this afternoon's game, with the visitors trying to make full use of their speed in their regular style of breaking through the middle.

The forward line has been their weakest link in many matches here and unless they show a vast improvement, Hongkong's more varied offensive tactics and greater kicking power in front of the goal should carry the day.

League Softball

Warriors Meet Braves In Crucial Fight For Survival Tomorrow

The fighting Warriors outfit will engage in a last-ditch fight for survival against the pace-setting Braves on Sunday morning to raise the curtain on another full Sunday programme of Senior "A" Division activities.

In the afternoon, second-place South China will throw their pennant aspirations this season into the melting-pot when they tangle with the hard-hitting US Navy team. Preceding this expected slug-fest, the Jaguars take on Buster Hollands' see-sawing Madcaps.

During the lunch-hour period, the Ladies' Loop will feature the third game in the five-game play-off series for the Ladies' Division Senior Championship when Fred Ewing's Squaws will repeat one of their long-awaited triumphs over their arch-enemy, the Wahoes.

The team that registers a win in this game will go into the fourth encounter with a decided psychological advantage.

Minor Division activities in the disaff circuit are confined to the game between the lowly Chinese Athletics and the Pandas girls, still playing in the first round of the struggle for Junior Championship honours. With morale boosted high from their late-innings win over South China last week, the vociferous Pandas are expected to administer another beating to the ultra-weak opposition.

MATCH OF THE WEEK

The ever-aggressive Warriors, rallying around new manager Charlie Figueiredo to the oft-repeated slogan of "Beat the Braves" will throw their all into Sunday's crucial tilt.

A win for the Warriors will haul the Braves back to within striking distance, even at this late stage of this season's pennant-struggle.

On the other hand, should the Braves carry the day, the Warriors will have to be satisfied with second or third place, at the most, for this season.

The Braves demonstrated real championship form last week when they accounted for the dangerous Pandas with consummate ease, and, judging from their steady, smooth teamwork all along, the Braves are highly favoured to maintain and extend their lead this week. Mentor Ed Carvalho will be relying, as the Braves have for the past three years, on the lone pitching arm of Chapple Remedios. Chatter Remedios, despite much heckling from the bleachers and oft-repeated accusations of illegal delivery, has proved the most effective pitcher in the Seniors' year after successful year.

Fine support on the receiving end, dished up by long and lanky Frankie Correa, has built up just about the most consistent battery of the current League, and this combination will prove hard to beat this week-end.

With rifle-armed Manuel Gutierrez at the hot corner, Joe Gutierrez at short, twinkling-toed Eddie Loureiro at the keystone sack and sky-scrapping Carlos Yvanovich at the initial station, it will take real hitting to get anything through the Braves' net. Backing up this first line of defence will be the sturdy outfield trio of Carlos Remedios, Spiky Gutierrez and Baji Dhabar. Against this awe-inspiring line-up, the tough Warriors will also be fielding their strongest side possible. Veteran Kasa Nazarin has been signed up and may lose the rubber for this needle match. But, with Joey Franca seemingly in top form, the Warriors would do well to think twice before making any battery changes.

The loss of heavy-hitting Brian Mooney, considerably weakened the Warriors' battery combination, but Vic Vianna put in a most creditable substituting job in their last game and may effectively plug up this important gap.

In their last game the Warriors fielded a brand-new infield quartet, with newcomer Reggie Santos at third and fleet-footed Stephen Xavier at the windy alley. Both players fully justified their selection and may be taking the field again for the Braves' game, although Santos is likely to step aside for his predecessor, Peter Hahn.

The outfield patrol of Jimmy Cheng, Johnnie Pereira and Alfreio Oliveira will adequately take care of what long flies come their way.

While the Braves have the smoother and better-balanced fielding team, the Warriors seem to possess slightly more weight behind their bats. Both outfits are lightning-fast afoot, and there will be much ado on the base-paths.

Whatever the outcome, plenty of thrills and spills are assured the eager fans, and the old ballpark should really be filled to overflowing this Sunday.

MR. MERLIN'S MAGIC STILTS

—If You Had a Pair, You Could Walk to Africa!

By MAX TRELL

KNARF and Hanli, the shadow-children with the turned-about names, were just about to set out for a walk, when their friend, Mr. Merlin the Magician came along. He greeted them pleasantly.
 "Taking a walk?" he said.
 "Yes," said Hanli. "We're going down to the pond and back."
 "What?" said Mr. Merlin. "Only down to the pond and back? That's no walk. I'm going to walk myself, but I'm going much further than that!"
 Knarf asked Mr. Merlin how far he was going.

Pleasant Morning
 "Well," said Mr. Merlin, "it's a pleasant morning. It's still an hour or so before lunch. I think I'll go to Africa and back."
 "Africa!" gasped Hanli. "That's thousands of miles away!"
 "So it is," said Mr. Merlin. "But how can you walk that far?"
 "Very simply," he said. "I use stilts."
 Knarf and Hanli both demanded to know what stilts were. So Mr. Merlin explained that stilts were sticks which you stood on and which made your legs longer. "With long legs, you can take long steps. With long steps, you can take long walks. The longer the...

Mr. Merlin hopped down lightly off his telephone pole stilts.
 stilts, the longer the distance you can walk. I'll show you," he said.
Climbed Up Poles
 With that, Mr. Merlin took two telephone poles (which is something only a magician can do), and after putting spikes in the sides of the poles and climbing up, he stood on the top ones. He was quite high in the air. His legs, of course, were now as long as the telephone poles.
 "Here I go!" he shouted down to Knarf and Hanli. "Saying this, Mr. Merlin took a couple of steps. The first step took him to the end of the road. The second step took him over the hill. The third step made him disappear altogether behind the other side of the forest. Knarf and Hanli had never seen anything so astonishing in their whole lives.
 However, a moment or two later, Mr. Merlin returned. He hopped down lightly off his telephone pole stilts.
 "Well," he said, "what did you think of my way of walking?"
 "Wonderful," said Knarf. "We'd like a pair of stilts," said Hanli.

Four More Poles
 "Certainly," certainly," said Mr. Merlin. "I'll be glad to make them for you. Then we'll all go for a walk!"
 Mr. Merlin the Magician was as good as his word. He got four more telephone poles (which is something only the most superior kind of magician can possibly do) and made pairs of stilts for Knarf and Hanli.
 "I'll take a bit of practice, perhaps a minute or two, to get used to walking on stilts," Mr. Merlin told his two friends. "But once you get used to them, you'll find you'll hardly ever want to walk in the regular way again. Up we go!" he said, as he stood Knarf and Hanli on their new stilts.
 It certainly was exciting, standing way up in the air, with legs as long as telephone poles. All around them, Knarf and Hanli could see the tops of trees, the roofs of houses and the insides of chimneys.

All Started Out
 Mr. Merlin walked in the centre and held Knarf and Hanli each by an arm just to make sure they didn't topple over. Then they all started out.
 It was the most remarkable walk the two shadow-children had ever taken. They walked over hills as though the hills were no higher than the boulders. They crossed rivers as though the rivers were no wider than brooks. They walked over cities as though the cities were no bigger than doll houses. They walked across the ocean, as though the ocean were nothing but a shallow pond.
 "And here we are," said Mr. Merlin at last, "right in the middle of Africa!"
 Knarf and Hanli looked down. They knew they were in Africa because they could see lions and tigers, giraffes and elephants, and monkeys, all of them running around in the open without any cages.
 And they all returned home in time for lunch. Knarf and Hanli thanked Mr. Merlin, who carefully put the telephone poles back in place (which is quite a trick, too) for letting them take this wonderful walk.
 "Don't mention it," he said. "We'll do it again, whenever you like!"

ZOO'S WHO

REPTILES HAVE RULED THE WORLD MUCH LONGER THAN ANY OTHER FORM OF LIFE...
 A COMMON HOUSE SPIDER SHOULD BE ABLE TO SEE WELL. IT HAS EIGHT EYES.

Stamp Of The Week

Do you remember that tremendous piece of acting by Charles Laughton in the pre-war film "Les Miserables"? Or perhaps you saw Robert Newton play the same part in a recent remake of the show.
 The role was that of Javert.
 ("I am the law"), the grim and powerful figure created by France's Victor Hugo who wrote the book from which the film was made.
 Today Hugo is honoured as an author of world renown in this German stamp. And when Germans praise Frenchmen it is now.
 Who was this Hugo? He was the son of one of Napoleon's generals and when the French overran Spain, Victor spent boyhood years in pomp and luxury there.
 With the downfall of Napoleon, he knew poverty in Paris and wrote by candlelight in the traditional garret.
 Success came when he was 20. His first volume of poetry attracted King Louis XVIII, who wept over it.
 Hugo was made a Chevalier.
 He became one of France's great lyric poets. But he would not goad at politics and once was only rescued from angry soldiers by his swift-thinking mistress, Juliette Drouet. Off he stomped to the Channel Islands — and exile. Then back to France — and fame.
 The stamp is one of a set of four which costs 10d. in London. It is perforated 13½ by 13.

JACOB Y ON BRIDGE

Open With Suit Bid Is Only Solution

By OSWALD JACOBY

IN today's hand South must open the bidding in a suit even though he has balanced distribution and stoppers in each of the four suits.

With 20 points, South is too strong for an opening bid of one-no-trump (showing 10 to 15 points) but too weak for an opening bid of two-no-trump (showing 22 to 24 points). The solution is to open with a suit bid and make a jump rebid in no-trump.

North has a very poor hand but realizes that South's bidding shows a very strong hand. North has 7 points in high cards and knows that South has at least 10 points in high cards. Hence North is not afraid to go on to game.

South wins the first trick with the queen of spades and counts his values. He can be sure of only one spade, one club, and three hearts. He therefore needs four diamond tricks in order to make his contract.

The diamond must be developed in such a way as to shut East out. At the second trick, therefore, declarer leads a low diamond to dummy's king and returns a diamond towards his own hand. When East follows suit with a low diamond, South must finesse the nine.

The finesse happens to succeed, and South therefore runs the entire diamond suit, making 10 tricks. Even if the finesse had happened to lose (with the cards differently divided, of course) South would still be sure of four diamond tricks and his contract.

It is important to note that South would be defeated at his game contract if he played the diamonds in the "normal" manner. Suppose, for example, that South wins the first spade, continues with the ace of diamonds and then tries to run the diamonds.

East can win the fourth round of diamonds with his jack and return a spade. West then takes enough spade tricks to defeat the contract.

CARD SOURCE

Q—The bidding has been:
North East South West
1 ♠ 2 ♠ 3 ♠ 4 ♠
You, South, hold: Spades A-J-5, Hearts Q-J-8, Diamonds Q-10, Clubs A-J-5-3-2. What do you do?

A—Bid four no-trump. You have a count of 15 points and a five-card suit for good measure. If North has a maximum of 18 points, he will accept your slam invitation, and there will be a good play for slam with 33 points and a five-card suit in the combined hands. If North has less than a maximum he will pass, and four no-trump will be easily made.

YOUR BIRTHDAY ... by STELLA

SATURDAY, JANUARY 24

BORN today, you are not likely to have an easy life. You are full of the individualism that will make you a success. But you must face up to the fact that you are a little longer to get real and lasting success. It will take you a little longer to get where you are going, but you will make it if you are really serious and determined.

There is a streak of the adventurer in your makeup. You are often a little too daring and will sometimes venture too far out on a limb in quest of an idea of your own devising. Learn to recognize a little less visionary and much more practical. Learn to recognize a little less opportunistic when they come and never refuse something because it is "too little." That "little" often leads to a lot more. You have a tremendous store of nervous energy and often waste time and effort chasing butterflies in youth, you are probably considered "flighty" by your more conservative friends. That would cultivate the ability to handle the practical things of life more easily. An early marriage would probably be one answer. That would give you the companionship of your own family to care for. You would also have the emotional balance that marriage can bring. Wed would also have the emotional balance that marriage can bring. Wed would also have the emotional balance that marriage can bring.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 25

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21-Feb. 19) — Some winter sports can bring much-needed relaxation. A calm attitude toward everything and everyone will go a long way toward solving your major problems.

PISCES (Feb. 20-Mar. 20) — Alertness to what is going on around you could turn an ordinary event into an important opportunity.

ARIES (Mar. 21-Apr. 20) — There are excellent signs for you to make the best possible use of them, as the day progresses.

Taurus (Apr. 21-May 21) — Make the best of it even if someone upsets the applecart. Pick up the pieces and forge ahead.

GEMINI (May 22-June 21) — This day should be set aside for quiet meditation and future planning. Devotional duties are important.

CANCER (June 22-July 23) — Get into the open if you can.

BORN today, the stars have given you real literary ability as well as a deep love for music and the arts. You have an excellent speaking voice and should be able to lecture or speak in public with ease and facility. You might even be attracted to the theatre as your life's work. You are a born leader in the arts and you will have something new and original to present to the world. Your greatest shortcoming, however, likely comes to you a little too easily at first. You get into the habit of turning things off too quickly. Then when the time comes that you are really needed, you are not there. You are not there when the time comes that you are really needed. You are not there when the time comes that you are really needed.

You are happiest when surrounded by congenial friends who are interested in the same things you are. You appear to be lacking in sentimentality, but your emotions are deep and are capable of a great love. Your marriage can be an exceptionally happy and contented one, provided you select some one who believes as much as you do in the consummation of your career and the fulfilment of his highest ideas.

MONDAY, JANUARY 26

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21-Feb. 19) — It is a good idea to lighten up the budget if you have been a little tight.

PISCES (Feb. 20-Mar. 20) — Don't err on the side of giving away more than you can afford. You are not there when the time comes that you are really needed.

ARIES (Mar. 21-Apr. 20) — Take things philosophically and make the best of any setbacks.

TAURUS (Apr. 21-May 21) — Be patient if it becomes necessary to postpone previously-made plans. There may be a very good reason for this.

GEMINI (May 22-June 21) — Consider every angle before you adopt an idea just now. Investigate all the facts.

CANCER (June 22-July 23) — Be extra cautious in everything today. It just isn't your day to be aggressive. Better to wait!

JOHN CLARKE'S CASEBOOK

Maurcen's Resolution

A GREY mist billowed up from the river and explored the narrow streets and the broad highways of East London, like a sailor in a strange port who aimlessly drifts around at a loose end for want of something better to do.

In a street not far from the river, a tall, slim girl was making her way home. She had spent the evening in the company of other girls; they had all been drinking, and now this one, whose name was Maurcen, was feeling the effects of the liquor.

The solid paving-stones beneath her feet had developed a terrible motion like a mid-ocean swell, and in the mist, which at one moment was gauzy-thin and at the next cloud-thick, the buildings that lined the street seemed at times to be afloat, while the street lamps swung through the air.

THE girl's progress towards the home she shared with her mother was painfully slow and enormously complicated. She weaved and strayed and staggered and several times was nearly run over when erratic course took her into the road. At last, and there was a kind of inevitability about it, Maurcen stumbled into the arms of a patrolling policeman.

The policeman arrested her for her state was such that there was not much else he could do, and next morning Maurcen was shown into the dock at the Thames court, where she pleaded guilty to the charge of having been drunk and incapable.

The magistrate, Mr. H. F. Sturge, heard the brief facts of the case and ordered that Maurcen should have a talk with the woman probation officer. He hoped, no doubt, to find out why an attractive young woman of 24, like Maurcen, should get into that sort of trouble.

THE morning's business of the court went on, and presently the probation officer brought Maurcen back to the dock, and herself went into the witness-box.

"Her story is," said the probation officer, in a tone that suggested that she did not find Maurcen's story particularly convincing, "that her mother has been ill, and so she went out and got drunk. She's in with a very bad set of girls. I'm afraid. She tells me she's been working as a waitress, but it has only been casual work. She's often been drunk."

"Are there other convictions, then?" Mr. Sturge asked. "Yes, sir," said the officer, "two last month for insulting behaviour."

"Let's face the facts," said the magistrate. "Those words, 'insulting behaviour,' are sometimes used for people who go on the streets; is that so in this case?"

"No, sir, fighting," the officer said.

THE magistrate asked Maurcen what she had to say. "I'm very sorry and I'm not drinking any more after today," Maurcen said.

"Let's be realistic," said the magistrate, "can you keep off it for six months?"

"Yes, sir," said Maurcen.

"Do you mean that?" the magistrate asked. "Yes, sir," said Maurcen, "I'll discharge you conditionally for six months."

Maurcen was shown out, and her resolve was put at once to the test. She left the court at precisely the hour that the public-house, across the street was opening for business. Maurcen averted her gaze from it and headed home to her ailing mother.

"THE GOLDEN LILY"

New Triumph For Father Sheridan

Eloquent gestures and music in the traditional style is the essence of Cantonese opera.

To watch one of these richly decorated shows and hear the music—something quite unique as far as the Western conception of the word goes—it would seem that English was in no way compatible with it.

And so "The Golden Lily," an adaptation of the well-known Chinese classical opera, and the sort of thing which the Wah Yan Dramatic Society have been putting on at intervals over the past six years, is an extraordinary achievement, though not the first, for the dialogue and songs are in English, without at all disturbing the classical sound and appearance of the show.

Father Sheridan S. J. is responsible for the production and the English words, and what a triumph they are!

Under his pen the opera, which contains little singing and is highly amusing, appears far more so, than the original.

It is all a gentle satire on the ceremonial ritual of the Imperial Court. "I am suffering from a surfeit of pomp," says the magnificent King in one scene. He is Poon Kwong-lan, a graceful actor with a pleasant, resonant voice.

How gorgeous are the traditional robes—a mass of shimmering colour—like a thousand peacocks' tails moving against the serene, life-like backdrop of a lotus-lake, the red pillars of Chinese pavilions, the picturesque blue-green roofs of palaces or the be-dragoned splendour of the Imperial throne room. The sets and costumes are real masterpieces. They made a fascinating setting for the stylized movements and mask-like faces of the players.

The usual punning, sarcasm and the thin nasal singing, although in English, is perfectly in tune with the whole scene, for the rhythm and cadence of the Chinese song has not been altered.

A NATURAL COMIC
Wong Chin-wah made full use of the scope his part gave for his histrionics; he played with excellent feeling the difficult General Wong Po Shu Wah, and Lily Tan, his opposite, has a lovely voice.

There is an enchanting duet in the third scene, and some tickling allusions to fashion and smoking!

One of the two soldiers who stand around looking splendid in gauze uniforms is a comic obviously in his natural element here and very entertaining.

In most cases the singing and speaking was clear and easily heard, but Edward Lim as Kung K'ai the scoundrel was apt to muffle his words.

The opera, which has an interesting story, is being staged

Living Language

Why we say On the lee side.

This is a rare example of a nautical phrase finding its origin in the country. The Anglo-Saxon aleow meant a shelter or cattle-shed out of the wind. "The lee side," or sheltered side, thus came to mean the side of the ship towards which the wind blew.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Memory Lane

Sir,—Last night Miss Woods announced that next week would be her last broadcast of "Down Memory Lane". Many letters have appeared in your correspondence columns deploring the removal of this very popular weekly feature from Radio Hongkong, and I ask again, can nothing be done to retain this enjoyable half hour?

In my last letter I asked if any of your readers could inform me as to who runs Radio Hongkong and whether there is an Advisory Committee. It seems your readers are just as much in the dark as I am, as there has been no reply to my question. It is known that new blood has been introduced into Radio Hongkong with influential backing and extra expense. No improvement, however, can be discerned in the programmes.

As this matter is of some importance to listeners, we are not entitled to some information from the Public Relations Officer? I assume his duty, among other matters, is to act as a liaison between Government and the Public.

Rumour has it that a petition is being prepared and any information upon this will, I feel sure, be much appreciated by others besides.
